course overview

- This course, brought to you in partnership with Plaskett College, is a Practitioner level course that will complement any other therapeutic discipline. Iridology can make a huge contribution to complementary therapeutic practice and is enhanced by a wonderful digital collection of eye photographs.
- Students will:
  - Learn to read signs indicative of biochemical, emotional and environmental influences that are hard to determine by other means
  - Receive the training to interpret health (and even aspects of personality) by close examination of the eyes, using suitable illumination and a magnifying glass
  - Gain an understanding of the different personality and constitutional types, and their vulnerability to various physical ailments varies, which will facilitate an empathy between patient and practitioner
- Become aware of the close relationship between naturopathic iridology as a diagnostic tool, nutritional medicine and other naturopathic disciplines
- Be presented with the Australian School (Dorothy Hall) and the German School (Dr Deck/Harri Wolf) of thoughts, both of which provide an added dimension to the study and interpretation of the constitution
- Be shown how all three major schools of iridology embody different aspects of the truth; how each is individually valuable and how a full and deep understanding of the meaning of 'constitution' can be gained through a sympathetic synthesis of the contributions from all three of these schools
